What a great value today's Sohio X-70 gasoline is, too. It is many times better than the 1921 kind, better than the 1940 kind-in fact, the best regular gasoline money has ever bought.

It comes to you cheaper because the oil industry, in spite of higher crude prices at the well, has been constantly making economies in processing, in service and in transportation. A large part of the company's profits have been put to work buying equipment that benefits its customers.

So, as long as you are saving a dime at Sohio, why not put that dime away? Try putting a dime in a bank for every gallon of gas you buy and think of us as you do it. Your Sohio dealer will be glad to give you a bank like the one pictured next time you drive in for gasoline.

THE PACT AND THE PEACE

THE speech of Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, in which he stated and explained his opposition to the Atlantic Pact and its attendant arms program, is of such import- functions previously cared for by the city. ance that it merits reading in full by every tion and the world. It is one of the significant political statements of this period even though the Senate vote on the pact was heavily against the Ohio senator's

It is necessary to recognize that Senator lantic alliance in itself, or to the purposes or objectives of the pact. The thing which swayed him against the pact was the seemingly inseparable association of the alliance with a project "to arm half the world said, moves the world toward war instead of away from it, and is directly contrary to the purpose and obligations of the United Nations instead of in fulfilment of them.

Senator Taft declared his recognition of the fact that the majority of the Senate, and probably of the American people, disagree with his position. That majority, which thought that he is wrong, should give equal recognition to the possibility that he might be right.

The individual may agree or disagree with Senator Taft's interpretation of the obligations of the pact, and with his findings as to the direction in which the combination of pact and arms program will lead us and the world. But no devoted American can disagree with the senator's attitude toward the facts as he sees them. If he is right about what the program means, then he also was right in opposing it. That inescapable possibility demands the most earnest and thoughtful consideration of the argument he has advanced.

"I am one of the great army of small landlords. I occupy an upper flat, rent out the lower. There is also a small third floor apartment which we rent furnished. In 1942 the third floor brought $10 per week, the ceiling rent. The first floor rent was frozen at $41 per mo., including garage.

Most of my correspondence on this subject has not been of this nature. Most of it has been insultingly vituperative. Most of my correspondents object to paying a rent that will permit the owner of the property to break even, much less to earn some income from his investment.

Not until she was in the coach did she feel nervous about her adventure. Her few memories of the house of Commonwealth Avenue were gilded over by her present desires. • NEW STATESMAN-The recent Big Four foreign ministers' meeting in Paris saw the emergence on the world stage of France's Foreign Minister Robert Schuman. An unknown until precipitated into the arena of French politics, he is believed to have played he most important part in changing French psychology.

At previous meetings or other dealings with France, a fear of the emergence of a military Germany has plagued the French representative. It had become a national psychosis. Schuman regards the peril lightly. Now France as a whole takes the matter less seriously, due in part to the promise of the rearmament program and the North Atlantic Alliance.

Schuman, strangely, is a native of Lorraine, which was in German hands from 1870 to World War I. Until he served in the French army, fighting Germany, 1914-1918, he knew no word of French.

THE PACT AND THE PEACE

THE speech of Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, in which he stated and explained his opposition to the Atlantic Pact and its attendant arms program, is of such import- functions previously cared for by the city. ance that it merits reading in full by every American interested in the future of his nation and the world. It is one of the significant political statements of this period even though the Senate vote on the pact was heavily against the Ohio senator's stand.

It is necessary to recognize that Senator Taft was not opposed to the defensive Atlantic alliance in itself, or to the purposes or objectives of the pact. The thing which swayed him against the pact was the seemingly inseparable association of the alliance with a project "to arm half the world against the other half." This project, he said, moves the world toward war instead of away from it, and is directly contrary to the purpose and obligations of the United Nations instead of in fulfilment of them.

Senator Taft declared his recognition of the fact that the majority of the Senate, and probably of the American people, disagree with his position. That majority, which thought that he is wrong, should give equal recognition to the possibility that he might be right.

The individual may agree or disagree with Senator Taft's interpretation of the obligations of the pact, and with his findings as to the direction in which the combination of pact and arms program will lead us and the world. But no devoted American can disagree with the senator's attitude toward the facts as he sees them. If he is right about what the program means, then he also was right in opposing it. That inescapable possibility demands the most earnest and thoughtful consideration of the argument he has advanced.

These Days

Here are the contents of another letter from a small landlord in Buffalo, N. Y .:

"I am one of the great army of small landlords. I occupy an upper flat, rent out the lower. There is also a small third floor apartment which we rent furnished. In 1942 the third floor brought $10 per week, the ceiling rent. The first floor rent was frozen at $41 per mo., including garage.

"Here is the situation under rent control. I need not go into detail how maintenance costs have risen since 1942. Nor to the fact my county tax has increased 75 percent and will continue to grow each year, for Erie County has taken over some new

"I applied a couple of years ago for an increase on ground of hardship and a major capital improvement costing $400. I received permission to increase the third floor rent $2 per week, and the first floor apartment $2.35 per month.

"The third floor consists of three rooms and bath. It is furnished, and utilities are included. Similar apartments decontrolled are bringing from $15 to $20 per week, sometimes more.

"The first floor is large and attractive, with seven rooms, including four bedrooms. Garage goes with the apartment. This flat today brings $43.35 per month, the present ceiling. A few years ago it brought $72 and there was no complaint. Regulations do not permit the area rent director to consider how much it previously brought, nor how much similar decontrolled apartments are bringing today, which is from $80 to $100 per month.

"Now, a few personal facts. I was laid off last September from a government job as adjudicator with the Veterans Administration and am still unemployed. A man of 56 doesn't find it too easy to get a job today. That is why rent control hits me so hard. Where I should have some small profit from the investment in my home I have shown it as a loss for the past four years on my income tax return, and the figures have not been questioned by the Internal Revenue Department."

Most of my correspondence on this subject has not been of this nature. Most of it has been insultingly vituperative. Most of my correspondents object to paying a rent that will permit the owner of the property to break even, much less to earn some income from his investment.
